Portfolio Site

For my portfolio site, I wanted a large rotating image module that span to the left and right sides and a long homepage. I also wanted my site to speak about who I am so I went for bright colors and animation and sound effects for I love comedy shows, some videogames, and I could pick a design a type of packaging it would be for toys. I also wanted my site to give a warm welcome so I made an image module for that purpose.

Research

In couple of sites I found that I think are well designed, they incorporated slanted sections which I though was nice and something different and yet doesn't take away from the site.

There were also plenty of long lengthed sites I found. Well more like a ton in pininterest.com and some in the "behance" site.

In many sites, I found nice looking illustrations and images that hint to you that it was made for a specific purpose and for a specific site. I thought these were well thoughtout and makes me reaffirm that images are one of the most important elements you have to put on to a site.

There were also few simple looking sites that I found that looked nice even though there are not much in its designs but they stand out well against others. They remind me that sometimes its best to make designs simplified.
Lastly in this site to the right, I found illustrated looking fonts which I thought made its site more free and not as constricted compared to others yet there is still some order to it and looks tidy and neat.

Simple designs with circle for its logo and one for the current page you are on. That is its header tag.
There is also a wide image module with titles relating to things the designer/ artist is doing.

A drawer and a painter, her portfolio site has wavy dotted grey lines for its background. This is porbably one of her works as her works mainly look like that. This wavy appearance is also shown in the image on the homepage though its of a different design and the artist wrote her name on it and drawn her porftolio logo on there too.
Her logo and header tags looks like it was made by spray paint with its grafitti art appearance.

Her site is long lengthed with what appears to be java effect inisde. As you scroll down, images and icons will appear and some images allow you to look at some areas hidden unless you scroll up and down on it. She does fine art, modeling, and graphic design which she shows on her site.
Her images has a pixelated quality to it and tells her viewers she is a model.
